

Remote site internal auditing

Moving towards a new horizon of internal auditing

Laws and regulations are increasingly becoming stringent and demanding and, in parallel, companies are expanding globally as technology is making the world a smaller place.

In this scenario, it has become essential for multinational organisations to increase their spend on governance and compliance related activities. They are increasingly looking at global partners who can generate synergies and do 'more for less'.

Remote site internal auditing may be the solution to your problems

Grant Thornton in India, with its deep expertise and modern IT infrastructure, is uniquely positioned to help your organisation by adding more value at a much lower cost. We have successfully helped multiple global organisations through remote site internal auditing.

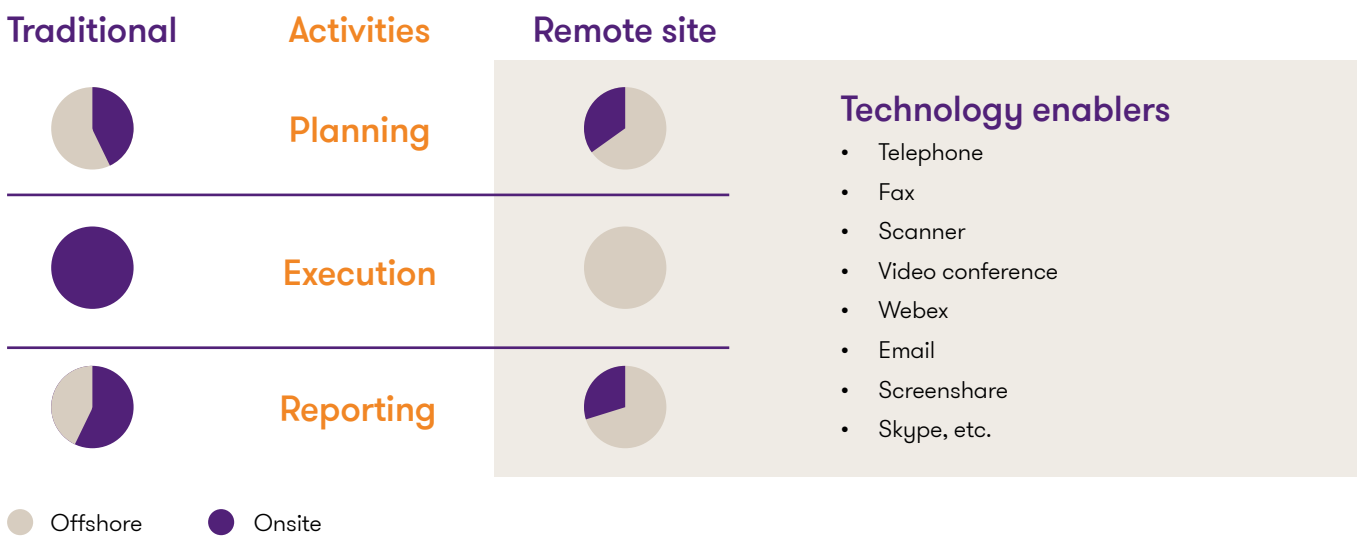

What is remote site internal auditing?

Today, technology has enabled auditors to access information and people virtually, from anywhere in the world, enabling them to conduct audits 'remotely'.

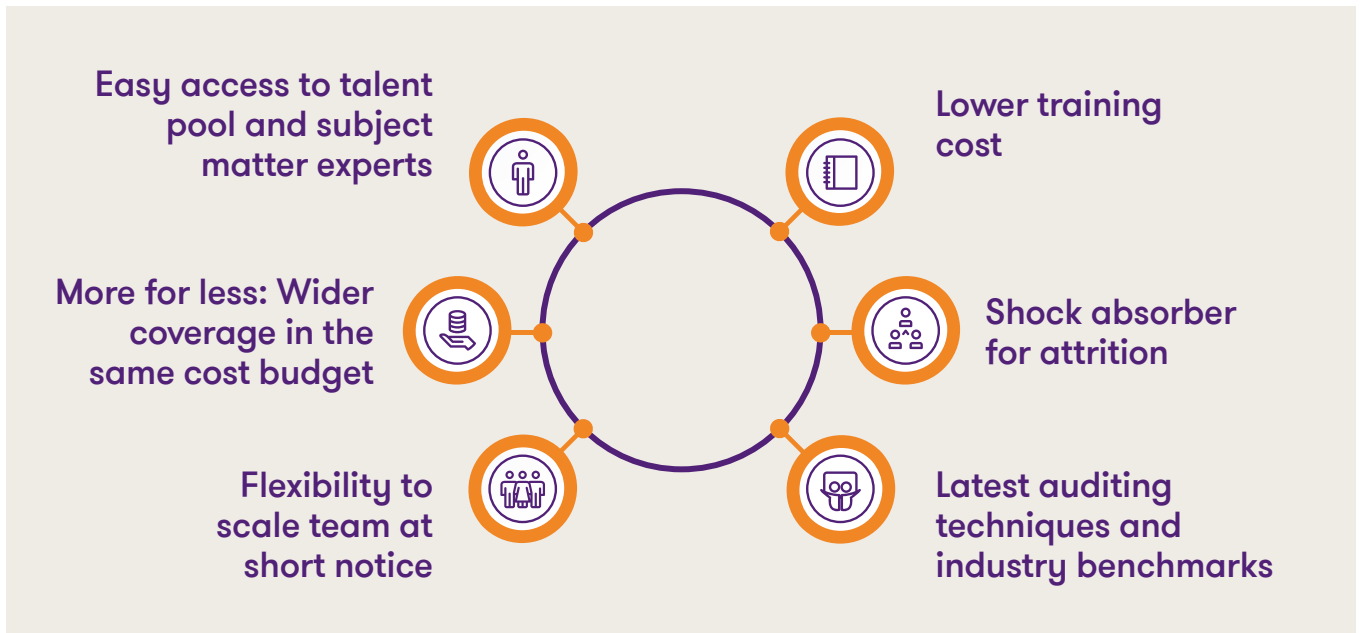

Remote auditing is the process by which auditors couple IA techniques with technology and assess the effectiveness of internal controls, gather electronic evidence, and interact with clients, all without the need to be physically present, ie offshore.

As the internal audit function seeks cost control and quality improvement, and takes full advantage of emerging business technology, remote site internal auditing becomes an increasingly sensible and viable option.

A typical onsite and offshore activity mix

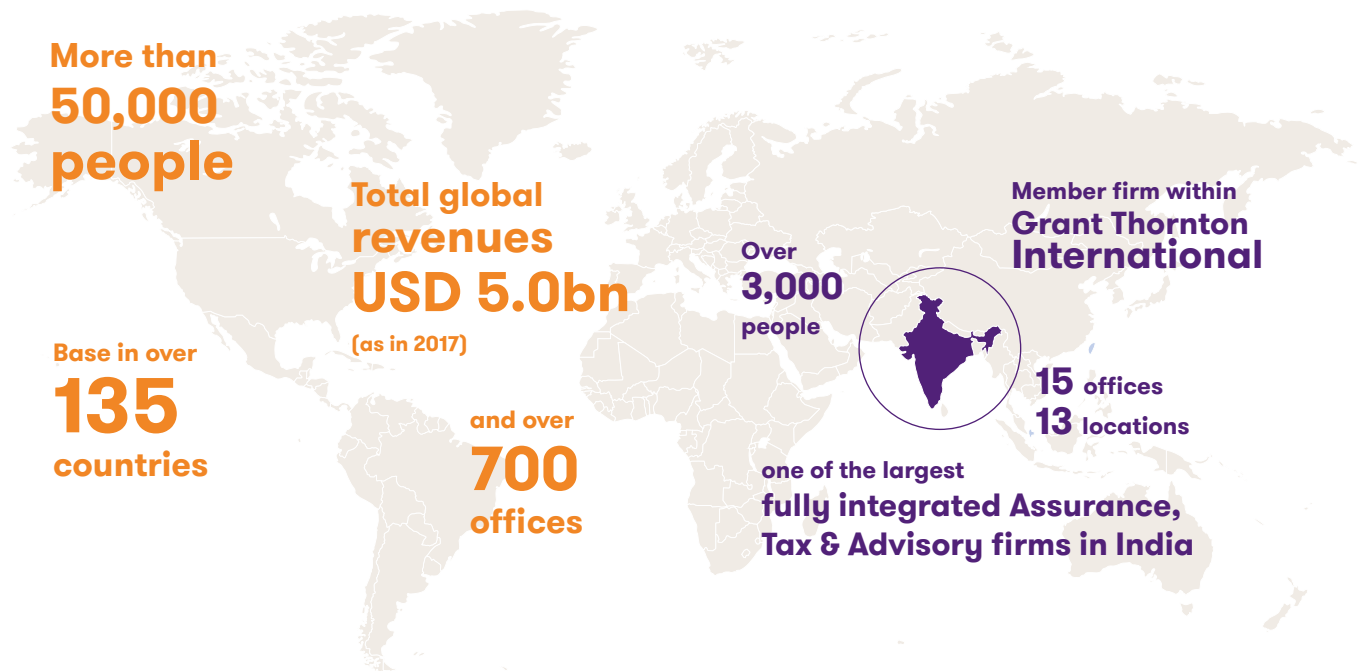

A win-win for clients

With business and technology disruptions making their presence felt, internal audit functions are required to manage costs more efficiently. This makes it an opportune time for internal auditors to take a closer look at remote auditing.
